Ethical challenges for business in the future

In our ever-changing world, businesses face challenges such as digitalization, climate change, globalization, growing social inequalities, human rights violations, and many more. Unfortunately, the business sector is today often regarded as one of the main contributors to ethical problems instead of providing solutions for the latter. How do we have to change our economic system, our corporations, or leadership to solve ethical problems instead of aggravating them?

Many young business ethics scholars of various disciplines are concerned with ethical challenges within business in the future. As for that we invite them to discuss the following questions: How can we address current challenges in business ethics? What will be the role of corporations in the future and what are their responsibilities? Which role can/should leaders play? How does good leadership look like in the twenty-first century? How can we best describe and evaluate current social, environmental or ethical problems within the business world? Which actions are necessary to make our society and planet a worth-living place for all sentient beings? Which methods do we need to analyze problems in business ethics?

The first Wittenberg Interdisciplinary Business Ethics Conference (WIBEC) aims to provide a platform for exchange for young scholars working in the fields of economic, corporate, and leadership ethics. It is our goal to bring scholars together from all kinds of disciplines: philosophy, sociology, business studies, economics, psychology, jurisprudence, theology, history, and others. Scholars from other disciplines, e.g. art or the natural sciences are very welcome to apply if they wish to contribute to the broad topic of business ethics. All kinds of methodologies are welcome, including conceptual and normative works as well as qualitative and quantitative studies.
